A LONG STRUGGLE.

The Famous Suit of Myra Clark Gaines Against the City of New Orleans.

Decision by the United States Supreme Court in Favor of the Original Claimant's Heirs.

Litigation Lasting Fifty-Five Years-The Verdict Against the City $576,000.

The Unted States supreme court last Monday, in an opinion by Justice Bradley, awarded the executors of the will of Myra Clark Gaines the sum of $576,000 against the city of New Orleans for the use of property sold by the city, but recovered by Mrs. Gaines after long litigation. The judgment of the lower court awarding the executor $130,000 for the use of the unimproved property sold by the city was not concurred

The case of the City of New Orleans, appellant, vs. the heirs of Myra Clark Gaines, appellee, is one of the most noted in the legal history of this country. It is in the legal history of this country. It is noted among other things as having the longest record of any case that has ever been brought to the United States supreme court. The record required two strong men to lift it, and cost more than $10,000 to men to lift it, and cost more than $10,000 to print it. The immediate case which has been decided is one of the collateral issues of the famous litigation which has lasted now for fifty-five years. The history of the litigation of which this case forms a part is a romance. This particular suit is to recover from the city of New Orleans a judgment for the value and use of lands which belonged to the estate of Daniel Clark, the father of Myra Clark Games. In the lower father of Myra Clark Gaines. In the lower court Mrs. Gaines was victorious, and recovered a judgment for $1,925,667. Upon the filing of the Master's report, and after exceptions thereto had been filed, a final decree was rendered on May 3 1883, in favor of complainant for improved and uning. vor of complainant for improved and unimproved land already in judgment in the Mousseaux and Aguelly ejectment bills, $576,707.92; for balance of rents on unimproved lands, $1,848,959.91; total $1,925,687.83.

Interest is claimed in this suit upon this judgment at 5 per cent, and as the judgment is now several years old, the total amount involved in the decision of the supreme court is considerable more than $2,000,000. Mrs. Gaines is dead. Most of the family are dead. The surviving legal heirs are her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Whitney, the administratrix under the approved will of Mrs. Gaines, and two grand children as on and a daughter the children of dren, a son and a daughter, the children of the daughter of Mrs. Gaines. The younger heirs are the Christmas children. The other heir is Mrs. Whitney, a widow of possibly 60 years of age. The amount of $2,000,000 involved in this suit is but a small portion of the vast estate which Myra portion of the vast estate which Myra. Clark Gaines has had in various ways adjudicated as belonging to her as the sole lawful heir of her father. But the litigation of this vast estate is not ended yet, and it is possible that still another life may be conquered before the final verdict in this great easy shall be rendered.

great case shall be rendered.

The history of the case and of the great litigation antecedent to it reads like a romance. Daniel Clark died in New Orleans Aug. 16, 1813. He was born in Sigo, Ireland, in 1776. He was a man of large fortune active thrifty and accomplished. He land, in 1776. He was a man of large for-tune, active, thrifty and accomplished. He had a home in New Orleans and his prop-erty was in Louisiana. His mother lived in Germantown, Pa., and he had no rela-tives in Louisiana at the time of his death. He made a will on May 20, 1811, in which he left to his mother, Mary Clark, then in Germantown, all of the estate whether real or personal which he might die possessed of, and named Richard Reif and Beverly Chew as testameutary executors. Before of, and named Richard Relf and Beverly Chew as testameutary executors. Before this will was probated the attention of the court was called to the fact that another and later will had been made by Clark in July, 1813. An unsuccessful effort was made to find this last will. On Aug. 27, 1813, Richard Relf was appointed and qualified as testamentary executor of Daniel Clark under the will of May, 1811, Beverly Chew being at that time, absent, from the Clark under the will of May, 1811, Beverly Chew being at that time absent from the state of Louisiana. On Jan. 21, 1814, Beverly Chew was appointed iestamentary executor, along with Richard Reif, and qualified as such. On Oct. 1, 1813, Mary Clark, as the sole heir, devisee and legatee
of Daniel Clark, executed her power of attorney to Richard Reif and Beverly Chew, merchants and executors of the last will of Dan el Clark, with general powers of ad-Dan el Clark, with general powers of adany part of the estate devised and be queathed to her by Daniel Clark. This power of attorney was not deposited for record until May 5, 1834, when it was placed in the office of John Lynd, a notary public of News Orleans.

public of New Orleans. On Oct. 30, 1821, these executors sold of this estate the tract which has become known as the Blanc tract for the price of known as the Blanc tract for the price of $4,759. This tract is situated in the heart of the city of New Orleans. Myra Clark was born on Dec. 31, 1806. Her mother was Zulime Carriere. Five days after she was placed in the family of Col. S. B. Davis at the instance and request of Daniel Clark. Mrs. Harriet Harper, afterwards Mrs. Harriet Smyth, a niece, of Col. Davis, taking her and nourishing her as a foster mother. She continued to reside with the family of Col. Davis, the friend of Daniel Clark, in New Orleans, until 1812, when Col. Davis removed with his family to Philadelphia, taking Myra with him. She bore the name of Myra Davis, was brought up in the family of Col. Davis as a daughter, and was ignorant of her true name and parentage until 1832, when she intermarried with William Wallace Whitney. In June 1834, she filed a petition in the court of probate at New Orleans to establish the lost will of her father, Daniel establish the lost will of her father, Daniel Clark. On June 8, 1836, on motion of the defendants, Mrs. Whitney was non-suited. In July, 1836, William Waliace Whitney and his wife, Myra Clark Whitney, filed a bill in equity in the United States courts at New Orleans to establish the lost will of 1813, to have her status settled, to be declared the devisee and heir of her father, and to recover the property which had been sold by Relf and Chew under the will of 1811. of 1811 and other cases. He recently died in the city of Baltimore. One of the latest legal efforts of his life was the preparation of his final brief in this case. The following are final brief in this case. The following are some of the more striking passages which may be of interest to laymen in the brief in th he records his views of the rights of Mrs. Gaines to the property in question:

The will of Clark dated in 1813 and admitted to probate in 1856 was a revocation pation and dyspepsia.

Among the property specifically sought that time had been orally proved by persons who were his friends and who had been told the contents of the paper. This will was the product of a man of capacity and position in society. This paper was not the result of any captation, surprise, sinister influence. It was spontaneous—his own handiwork in every line and letter. He pronounced his work to have been well done. He had full time to revoke it—to destroy it—but the testimony tells of care and vigilance. His dying instructions were that the trunk containing it should be carried to one of the executors. His death occurred in August, 1813. There was a war with Great Britain, and so commerce and intercourse at New Orleans was circumscribed. The yellow fever was then a visitor at the home and caused the death of Clark. His house was accessible to but a few. Few persons would be likely to come to him at this time. It was accessible and open to Richard Rolf, the executor named in the will of Daniel Clark. Rolf was a visitor there at the day of his death, and had knowledge of and was charged to have visited the place of deposit of his will. When Clark died the will he had made a few weeks before was sought for and not found. Rolf produced the will dated in 1811, and in the absence of an act of revocation of the will of 1813 there could be no found. Rolf produced the will dated in ISII, and in the absence of an act of revocation of the will of ISI3 there could be no valid claim set up for the succession of Daniel Clark. The ordinary presumption that the failure to find the will implied its destruction by the author could not be supported in this case. There was sufficient testimony to establish the will in IS34 and IS56; the court of probate refused to hear at one time, and the court of probate at a later date was content. The supreme court afforded the necessary aid to supply the conforded the necessary aid to supply the con-sent to the order of probate. The effect of the probate was to stamp with nnility the acts executed by Chew and Roelf in the name and with the authority of the legatee of 1811. It gave to Mrs. Games the standing in court, it being the design of the ab straction of the will and of other measures to efface knowledge of her name and exis-tence. More than seventy-four years ago was this great transgression committed. The enormous volumes before this court The enormous volumes before this court don't show a more than detached fragment of the history. The victim of this wrong-doing was followed with contumely, reprosch, abuse, slander from those who were convicted as possessors of her property in bad faith by the highest tribunals of the country. She endured privation, suffering, sorrow, the whips and scorns of litigation, content one and quarrel, and scarrillous abuse from whips and scorns of litigation, content one and quarrel, and scurrilleus abuse from bad men. She did not faiter, and in the abiding confidence in the providence of her Creator and the tribunals of her country she did not hesitate to believe that she or her children would have an award of jus-tice in the time appointed by her heavenly Father.

The contests between Mrs. Gaines and her lawyers have formed not the least conspicuous feature of the case. The most eminent attorneys have been employed and ber lawyers have formed not the least conspicuous feature of the case. The most spicuous feature of the case. Deserted by one counsel after another, Mrs. Gaines struggled on hopeful, buoyant, confident of victory, until she was finally laid in her grave. Long years of litigation washed a way her money, and at it times she was too poor to pay court costs. But still she persevered in her determination to clear the stain from her mother's name and to secure what she regarded as her right. Many residents of Washington remember her as a little, thic, old woman the smartly along with her son and son-in-law have as so passed away, and nobody now remains but Hattie L. Mrs. Crawford is probably mere an fait with all the ins and outs of French political life and French society scandal than any correspondent living, not excepting even the Times representative, the great Blowitz himself. For years she was the in-Blowitz himself. For years she was the in-timate friend of Gambetta; since his death she has been on terms of close friendship with M. Clemenceau, and latterly, like all of her sex, she has developed a distinct penchant for Gen. Boulanger himself. Her penchant for Gen. Boulanger himself. Her memory is a perfect widow's cruse of gos-sip regarding all the crowned and un-crowned heads of Europe, most of which finds its way into the ready pages of Truth. There is an amusing story of how the lady once stopped the proposed marriage of Princess Louise of Wales with a foreign prince of royal blood. A great French doctor imparted to her the secret of a naindoctor imparted to her the secret of a pain-ful hereditary malady to which the royal suitor was a victim. A paragraph appeared in Truth; the Prince of Wales hastened to make inquiries; the facts were verified, and the unfortunate young man returned home without his bride.

One quality Mrs. Crawford possesses which is only too rare in journalists; I mean her power of broad human sympathy. She is frankly democratic in her leanings, and she possesses a very thorough insight into the real workings of French political opinion. She is too wise a woman to prophesy unless she knows,

The spoliation simply hindered those in acquiring a possession of their rights and enabled the spoliators to practice fraud and enjoy for a time the truits of successful spoliation. The plaintiff, the victim of the rapacity and greed, was at the time ignorant of her loss and incapable of vindicating her claims or defending her inheritance from lawless usurpation. Daniel Clark had complied with the requirements of law in making a transfer of his property after his death by an holograph will. He had manifested his intentions with scrupulous care. There had been no secrecy nor guile in respect to his purposes. His will has since
